Description

Conduct market research in the local or national labor market to better understand the barriers that women and other underrepresented social groups experience on their path to studying and pursuing a career in lucrative industries

Analyze societal and educational gaps that might make it difficult to achieve the company's recruitment targets and develop an outreach plan to address these gaps

Based on the results of the research, consider how to alleviate barriers, and reach more women and underrepresented social groups to create a more inclusive talent pool

Identify the best communications channels to reach these groups based on the research findings

Challenges to Implementation

Financial and human resources to conduct such types of market research

Transparency and willingness of people to participate in the research

What Success Looks Like

Specific barriers and opportunities to creating a more inclusive talent pool are identified based on the cultural and sectoral context in which the company operates

Improved strategy for recruiting and hiring from an inclusive talent pool that is informed by the unique challenges in the given labor market
