Description

Follow up with new hires regularly to ensure they are feeling comfortable and well-embedded in the organization, create opportunities for them to get and provide feedback

Use structured or semi-structured interviews and questionnaires, or focus group sessions, to understand whether they are facing any obstacles or hindering factors, asking specific questions on the work environment, job satisfaction, potential to deal with assigned duties, team collaboration, cooperation with managers, and positive or negative aspects of cooperation including any kind of discrimination or harassment experienced

Ensure feedback is taken seriously and reflected back into the organization in a manner that helps to improve and does not create a negative backlash

Challenges to Implementation

Limited HR resources and competing priorities

Acceptance to establish such feedback loops in addition to other established complaint mechanisms or functions may be limited

Victimization of, or backlash against, new hires who address negative issues may impede open feedback

What Success Looks Like

Satisfaction and retention rate of women and employees with diverse social identities one year after hiring is high

Inequality, exclusion, and other negative issues identified in onboarding process are addressed and resolved successfully

New hires show strong performance rates

New hires feel engaged, motivated, and identify with the organization
